If one of these drugs is recommended, the doctor will discuss with you about the risks and benefits of the drug. Some of these are: Some chemotherapy drugs like platinum-based chemotherapy (this is a certain group of chemotherapy drugs) Some types of cancer (for example, lung cancers or ovary) to have a low level of hemoglobin To suffer from cancer symptoms of anemia The anemia often starts little by little, so as not to notice the symptoms at the beginning. The anemia can also cause difficulties to breathe normally, making your daily activities difficulty. Most of these reactions are mild and can be treated, but sometimes they can be more serious. Inform your medical care team if you have other health problems, such as heart or pulmonary diseases, as this can worsen the symptoms of anemia. Pulmonary lesions related to transfusion: this is one of the most serious risks, as it can cause difficulties and requires a hospital treatment. Therefore, if you already have a cardiac problem, anemia can get worse. However, receiving a blood transfusion also has some risks. It is good to drink other liquids instead of water (different from beer, wine or other alcoholic beverages). These drugs can cause very serious side effects. Make sure you mention how the symptoms affect your daily life, as this information will help you get the treatment you need when needed. Sanguigni products are analyzed to make sure they are safe and of the same type of blood of the receiver. Some foods that contain great quantities of iron are: dark green leafy vegetables like spinach, hedgehog cabbage, wild cabbage or chard batato eggs (sweet pata, camote) fruit as plums, raisins, strawberries, figs or watermelon And dried peach beans (beans, beans, beans) meat and fish Meat bread, cereals, rice and pasta that have enriched blood transfusions for the treatment of anemia blood transfusions are safe, and a common way to treat anemia in people with cancer. If you experience any of these symptoms, tell your doctor or nurse immediately. Erythropoyesis stimulating agents act as a hormone (called erythropoietin) that the kidneys produce to help the body produce its own new red blood cells. Even so, these drugs can help patients receive chemotherapy to have higher haemoglobin levels and less blood transfusions. Problems caused by anemia The first thing your doctor needs to know is how severe the anemia is. This means that it has lower haemoglobin levels (HGB). This will be based on several factors, including: your haemoglobin level and other laboratory results the type of cancer treatments you have previously given the chances that any treatment you receive can worsen your anemia if you experience problems in the lungs, in the heart or vascular problems (circulation) Your age If you do not seem at risk of problems due to anemia, your medical care team will closely monitor your haemoglobin level and ask about your symptoms every time you visit the doctor's office. Check with the medical care team on the most appropriate treatment for you. Your doctor will explain the level of haemoglobin and the severity of the anemia. Some of these symptoms are more severe than others. A transfusion can be carried out if the haemoglobin level reaches a certain number or if the symptoms cause a lot of discomfort that a blood transfusion must get carefully that the donated blood is with the recipient's blood. This can lead to a gradual improvement in symptoms related to anemia. The need for a blood transfusion depends on the severity of your symptoms and your haemoglobin level. What can the patient's assistant do? This test not only indicates if you suffer from anemia, but can also help your doctor determine the cause. This type of anemia is often found in people with long-term problems such as congestive heart failure, inflammatory diseases or cancer. You may also need to do more tests to help find the cause of anemia. Erythropoiesis stimulating agents (ESAs) Another way to treat anemia in some patients is to administer drugs that cause the body to produce more red blood cells. In the treatment of anemia, there are two main objectives: Treating the cause of anemia Increasing the level of hemoglobin to relieve symptoms Some of the most common treatments of anemia in cancer patients are: Iron therapy Red blood cell transfusion, commonly known as transfusion Erythropoiesis Stimulating Agents (ESAs) Other medicines Your doctor will evaluate test results, symptoms, time you had symptoms, type of cancer, cancer treatment and other factors. Blood transfusion overload (TACO): This can happen if blood is given too quickly for the heart to handle it. A bone marrow test is to make sure that the bone marrow is working as it should Blood test to examine iron levels, vitamin B12 and folate A stool test to detect blood (called a stool hidden blood test or FOBT, acronym in English) Your doctor or nurse may use the results of these tests along with your medical information and a physical examination, to find out what could cause anemia. Healthcare professionals may try to assess the risk of serious anemia problems based on any symptoms and haemoglobin level. A person with cancer can suffer from anemia due to many different reasons. New or worsening tiredness making it difficult to carry out daily activities Chest pain or difficulty breathing when active Skin color, nail beds (nail base), or gums with a lighter appearance than usual Vertigo Weakness Faecal faeces bright red, dark red or black Vomiting dark brown or bright red (The last two are signs of bleeding, which can 2 be a cause of anemia). It can make you feel very tired because © The cells in your body can't get enough oxygen. Hemoglobin is the part of the red blood cell that carries oxygen to all the cells in your body. Anemia is a common side effect in cancer patients. Erythropoiesis stimulating agents are given by subcutaneous injections and the time it takes to start acting may vary from patient to patient. Sometimes you can not find causes other than anemia from chronic disease. Â" Consult your cancer medical care team if you experience any of the symptoms described in this article. Anaemia can affect quality of life, and it has been found that it reduces survival in people with cancer. Other medicines to treat anemia Depending on the type of anemia you have, anemia can also be treated with vitamin B12 or folic acid supplements.
